As a film-buff, I am keen on Peter Jackson's films. He started with splatter films which gave you the shivers in the nineties. That may be why he was disparaged by some film critics as soon as he tackled The Lord of the Rings trilogy. Besides, a lot of critics never forgave the fact that Jackson parted from Tolkien's text. But the trilogy was a huge success insofar as most spectators enjoyed the films and soon requested some more. A few years later, The Hobbit was unsurprisingly another ground-breaking success.
